

A City Comprehensive Plan is commonly referred to as the community's vision of the future. Consequently, the residents should have ample opportunity to formulate that vision. Our residents are entitled to a city-wide conversation about what our community should be in the future. This could include:

1. Specific and detailed information presented at public meetings
2. Public meetings targeted toward certain neighborhoods similar to those held to get resident input at the start of the Comp Plan revision process.
3. Surveys to more precisely determine resident opinions and clarify contradictions and general comments.
4. Meetings with a "town hall" format where residents can ask questions/comment on questions/and hear other peoples' questions.
5. An analysis by the city attorney available to all residents so they can better understand the Plan.
6. An executive summary to better inform the residents.
7. An opportunity for our residents to engage with each other regarding the Comp Plan.

The Bottom Line: The most important thing we can do for our residents is make sure they fully understand the Comprehensive Plan, have the opportunity to provide input and form a consensus and ensure the Plan implements their vision.

What better way to serve the residents and do what they hired us to do?
